Excerpt: . heavy rainstorm beat down upon them and put out the fire they carried. But since they had burning punk in the bag, they thought they could light their torches again. They waited for the rain to cease. Then they took the punk from the bag and tried to light their torches. But the wood was damp, and it was hard work to fan the spark into a flame. They worked so busily that they thought of nothing except the fire. They did not see a big-nosed rhinoceros that was watching them from among the trees. He was almost upon them before they thought of danger. Then they quickly sprang for the tree, but the old man lost his hold. He fell and was trampled by the monstrous beast. The rhinoceros tore up the ground with his horns until he had spent his rage. Then he tramped off through the woods. Sharpeyes paused again. His voice choked, so that he could scarcely speak. At length he told how he slipped down from the tree and found the old man dying. He carried him out to a grassy spot, where the old man died. 8 Sharpeyes covered his body with leaves and raised a mound of stones above it. Then he went back to the tree and searched for the lighted punk. But there was no punk to be found. The rhinoceros had trampled it under his feet. In vain Sharpeyes tried to find a spark....
